

Recently, I sent my objections to the rampant media consolidation to my Senators and Congressional representatives. I will continue to press them to force the FCC to do it's job in protecting free expression and diversity on the publicly managed spectrum. Recently, another glaring example of the danger of large media consolidation has come to my attention.

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. But when large companies control the airwaves, we get more of what's good for the bottom line and less of what we need for our democracy. Instead of something produced at "News Central" far away, it's more important that we see real people from our own communities and more substantive news about issues that matter.

Sinclair's actions
show why we need to strengthen media
ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license
renewal process
needs to involve
more than a returned postcard. Thank you.
